Science and Practice -A 65-year-old woman presented to the emergency department for a generalized tonic-clonic seizure. Antiepileptic drugs were initiated, and she was given intravenous phenytoin. One hour after initiating phenytoin, she experienced a sudden hemoptysis and became hypoxic, requiring endotracheal intubation. Chest x-ray revealed a large pulmonary effusion (Fig 1{ref-type="fig"}). An echocardiogram showed a large left to right shunt across the foramen ovale. Subsequent workup indicated no source of the shunt (in particular, shunt was not seen on computed tomography scan of the brain). Her recovery was complicated by pneumonia and was discharged to a short-term rehabilitation facility. She was seen again in outpatient follow-up over the next several weeks, at which point her neurologic examination was remarkable only for a right-sided homonymous hemianopsia. She remained neurologically intact and underwent successful surgical repair. The shunt had not closed within the general health care market.Fig 1Dry tap, obstructive pneumonia, and a large left to right interatrial communication visualized on leftward lateral tilt during the initial chest radiograph. *Red arrow* points at interatrial communication. What is the diagnosis? Question {#sec2} ===== What is the diagnosis for this patient? Diagnosis {#sec2.1} ----- Acquired atrial septal defect with right-to-left shunt. f678ea9f9e
