A new all-round system of a complete 3D model of the hepatocytes and their organelles of the mouse liver has been constructed. The parameters of the digitalized hepatocyte and its two components, nucleus and cytoplasm, which differ in parameters like size, shape, position, as well as the parameters of the hepatocyte's organelles such as mitochondria, Golgi's cisternae, smooth endoplasmic reticulum, mitochondria and glycogen particles (globules), have been determined. The transfer of the micrographs of the organelles to digital data, their visualization, and their segmentation have been carried out. The 3D reconstruction process was carried out in an automatic way. It has been proved that the presented system provides an interesting insight into hepatocyte morphology and the structures of its organelles. Moreover, the system of the digitalized hepatocyte and its organelles allows interdisciplinary works with the cooperation of biologists, medical doctors, and mathematicians. Military gun Military guns are individual weapons used in military contexts, as opposed to combat arms and crew-served weapons, which belong to a specific branch of the armed forces. A military rifle is a rifle used by military forces. A military machinegun is a machine gun used by a military force. A military grenade launcher is a grenade launcher used by military forces. A military mortar is a mortar used by a military force. A military tank is a tank used by a military force. Military may refer to two types of armed forces: Amphibious forces - forces operating in water Air force - forces operating from air (and not necessarily with a naval origin) Army - military forces in general Army of the Republic of Vietnam (
